Stories of the Spies.

The wilderness of Paran witnessed scene worthy of some grand painting on that day, when the spies came back from Eschol laden with the great grapes, and telling the tales of the mighty enemies in the promised land, the land flowing with milk and honey. The tent-dotted valley the quiet purple mountains in the dis visw, the people hurrying to the congregation in the tabernacle with eager expectant faces, and over all, the wondrous, mysterious pillar of cloud, in sight of which it is strange that there were ever to this poor petulant people, of whom it was the occasion for the semi-annual in-has been said they were well named stallation of its officers, the pastor per-

'children" of Israel. Then spoke the men whom Moses had sent to see what sort of land was before them, what cities and defences, and most of all what manner of people they had to fight. They admitted that the land was goodly, and showed the wonderful fruit of it, but they told great frightening tales of the glants, and walled cities, declaring them. The officers and committee chairmen installed were: President, W. C. Davis: Recording Secretary, Miss Nellie. it was worse than useless to try to overdren, come out of bondage, set up a wait

Sent Back in Humiliation.

Back into the wilderness in sorrow and humiliation God sent them for forty years more to wander. It was looked to be a constant of the constant of the constant of the stars of the fifth Churches. A large number of endeavorers were present, and spent a dealightful evening. After a few words of welcome from the president Mr. C. P. years more to wander. It was hard for them to bear their punishment, and harder still for Caleb and Joshua, who had been willing to fight. But Caleb carried with him God's promise that "bethem to bear their punishment, and ried with him God's promise that "beried with him God's promise that "because he had wholly followed the Lord his God" every foot of the land whereon his feet had stood should be his and his children's forever.

Perhaps Caleb had days of doubt, during those years of waiting, while they turned back, and the Anakims, the giants, still held Hebron, and the time of Caleb's early manhood and strength was fast slipping by. Was he troubled at the long delay, and did he wonder why it needs must ba?

But the time came at last when he could claim the promise God gave through Moses. After forty-five years of waiting, with increase of cares and labors, it would be but natural that Caleb might desire a pleasanter part of the new courtry for his heme than where those Anakims still had power. But Caleb comes forth and declares himself as strong yet kims still had power. But Caleb comes forth and declares himself as atrong yet as in the day that Moses sent him forth to view Canaan; ready and able to fight not only ordinary enemies, but these great giants with their fenced cites, begreat giants with their fenced cites, because God whom he had "wholly fol-

The first glance at our text almost gives one the impression that Caleb was choosing a goodly gift for himself until one recalls that day in the wilderness and remembers the circumstances fully. Morehinety-two.

About eighteen societies were represented at the meeting, some by both their superintendent and assistant superintendent.

the subject that will be considered by Epworthians Sunday evening, January References are found in Mark xvi:15,

The Epworth League topics are so arranged that each year of a quadrennium shall be devoted to some special theme. This year has been allotted to missions and allied ber volences. Much help and information on the subject can be found In the first chapter of "The Evangelizaon of the World in This Generation, by John R. Mott, which is one of the text books of the missionary study classes. The definition as given in this book is: "It means to give all men an adequate opportunity to know Jesus Christ as their Saviour and to become his real disci

The great commission given by Christ o his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." is applicable to his followers today. He who would limit the scope of this command misses the broadest Bible thought

14: "For whosever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him a whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher."

It is hardly possible for every Chris-tian to become a missionary in the sense of going to the foreign field, but everyone can help by giving of his means to-ward the support of those who can go; as, for instance, a young lady Epworth-ian in one of our Western States saves from her small earnings in a factory enough to support a native worker in India, which is about $30 a year.

Some Great Sacrifices.

The venerable John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides, and author of one of the books in the "Young People's Missionary Library," is an example of the sacrifices made by the missionaries, as the following proves: There was recently ary to the New Hebrides, and author of sarsitoary Locary, is an example of the sacrificers made by the missionarries, as the following proves: There was recently due him $70,000 from profits derived from the sale of his biography, but, instead of taking any of it for his own use, he gave the entire amount to the missionary society, saying: "It's the Lord's. Pass on the bread of life to my brethren."

The netive Christians also make sacrifications are the provided that the same sacrification is a same sacrification.

The native Christians also make sac-ifices. The converts at Banza Manteke, tirica, poor as they are, gave $850 tow-rd the work in 1899. C. C. Kelso, Singa-ore, writing to the "Byworth Herald," ates that "All of our native Christians
